President Word

Dear stakeholders,

Every year, the best-known university rankings publish their yearly results of the top universities in the world. Whether it's International University rankings, like World University Rankings (by Times Higher Education), Academic Ranking of World Universities (by Shanghai University), QS Rankings (by Top Universities), or local ones like U.S. News Rankings, these lists of prestigious institutions bring a lot of buzz, attention, and potential stress to prospective students still considering their study options.

University rankings are an important source of comparative information for various stakeholders year by year, they have an increasing impact on the higher education institutions and their environment, for example, the decisions of the future students in their choice of schools, the government policy of financing higher education institutions, as well as the way universities are managed.

This booklet addresses the Benha University rankings on the local, regional and international scale over the course of the past two years.

Vice President Word

Dears,

It is beyond doubt that rankings have become a significant part of the tertiary education landscape, both globally and locally.

In this landscape, rankings have risen in importance and proliferated in unimaginable ways. It has become commercialized and, with it, so has the sophistication of companies and organizations that rank colleges and universities.

Undoubtedly, rankings now play such a big role in shaping the opinions of current and potential students, parents, employers, and government about the quality of tertiary education institutions.

The ranking of Banha University has improved a lot since 2011 until now.
We continue to develop plans and policies that help improving the University's ranking

UI Green Metrics

UI Green Metrics

About UI Green Metrics

The UI Green Metric World University Ranking is an initiative of Universities Indonesia which is being launched in 2010. As a part of its strategy of raising its international standing, the University hosted an International Conference on World University Rankings on 16th of April 2009. It invited several experts on world university rankings such as Isidro Aguillo (Webometrics), Angela Yung-Chi Hou (HEEACT), and Alex Usher (Educational Policy Canada). It was clear from the discussions that current criteria being used to rank universities were not giving credit to those that were making efforts to reduce their carbon footprint and thus help combat global climate change. We were aware that several top world universities, for example Harvard, Chicago, Copenhagen have been taking steps to manage and improve their sustainability.

There are also cooperative efforts among groups of universities.

A grading system which includes information on sustainability at 300 universities exists under the title "the United States Green Report Card". This is excellent; however, results are given in terms of a grade (A to F) rather than a ranking and the number of universities included is relatively circumscribed.

We recognize the need for a uniform system that would be suitable to attract the support of thousands of the world's universities and where the results were based on a numerical score that would allow ranking so that quick comparisons could be made among them on the criteria of their commitment to addressing the problems of sustainability and environmental impact.
